

I would request that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved our time at home by effectively reducing the average number of calls received from 6-10 calls per week down to one call or less per week.

I work with a charitable organization which relies on telephone solicitation to raise funds for our work. I feel that while Indiana's law does handicap us to a small degree, the overall program is very successful in greatly reducing the annoying "cold sales" type of telemarketing calls which everyone received prior to the law being enacted.
